

Brady Connors

Director Of Client Communications

Your First Point of Contact at Inventor Beware

When you're ready to talk about your invention, it's time to talk to Brady Connors. As the first point of contact for clients, he patiently answers your questions, explains how the firm works, and sets up appointments so that your intellectual property work moves forward.

Championing Fitness, Athletics and Good Inventions

Brady has been playing sports his entire life or as he says it, "hitting anything with a stick or a ball." With a strong belief that competition and teamwork foster life-long work values, he championed youth athletics at both The Boys & Girls Club and FitKids in Temecula, California. Before a knee injury knocked him out of the game of baseball, he was pursuing a sports and business career.

Today, he still finds time to volunteer, but also acts as the designated hitter for the firm: following up and following through on marketing, web, and client issues.

Bringing Communication, Technology & Teamwork to the Family Business

Growing up the son of a sales representative taught him the power of communicating clearly; it's not about selling, but about having candid conversations. Joining the family business of law brings to the forefront his combined talents of talking, technology, and teamwork.

